Colleagues,

Here are some items of interest.

Richard Horwitz shares that Connecting readers in the New York and New Jersey areas may want to check their local TV listings for the documentary "Deadline Every Second" making the rounds of local PBS stations. It is being broadcast today - Tuesday, July 16 - in New Jersey (NJTV) and on Sunday, July 28 in New York City (Ch.13). It follows 12 AP photographers on assignments around the world. Hal Buell reports the film was shown at Columbia last year. It was produced by Ken Kobre, now a San Francisco photojournalism professor who taught in Boston in the 1980s. Some of his students would gain experience by accompanying our BX photographers on assignments. One student was Pete Souza, now President Obama's photographer.

US puts protection of journalists on UN agenda (from APME Update)

Associated Press Executive Editor Kathleen Carroll will be among journalists around the world briefing the U.N. Security Council Wednesday on the protection of journalists in conflicts. Acting U.S. Ambassador Rosemary DiCarlo, the council president for July, told reporters that since members last considered the issue in 2006, "worldwide violence against journalists has worsened and there has been a particular increase in murders and imprisonment arising from conflict situations." She said U.N. Deputy Secretary-General Jan Eliasson will brief the council along with Richard Engel of NBC, Somali journalist Mustafa Haji Abdinur from Radio Simba and Agence France Presse, Iraqi journalist Ghaith Abdul-Ahad from the Guardian, and Carroll, who is vice chair of the board of the Committee to Protect Journalists.
