Colleagues,

Here are some items of interest, leading off with news that Terry Taylor will retire in November as AP's sports editor.

Romenesko also reports that John Affleck, sports enterprise editor/interim deputy sports editor, has been named the Knight Chair in Sports Journalism and Society at Penn State.

Romenesko shared a memo from AP managing editor Lou Ferrara that Taylor, who has been Associated Press sports editor for 21 years and was the first woman to hold the position, is retiring on Nov. 15. Ferrara writes in his memo: "As many of you know, Terry has worked tirelessly to build AP Sports into what it is today — the leading breaking sports news operation on the planet for everything from the NFL to the Olympics and the World Cup." job posting will go up soon, and "we will be looking for a leader to continue to take the department into exciting new digital opportunities and directions."
